<sup>2</sup> 14:7 - captive people: Without the superscription of this psalm, one would think that the nation or a portion of the nation was in captivity. But the genuineness of the superscription cannot be questioned -- David is the author. What occasioned this psalm? There were times in David's life that surrounding nations at the very least infringed on the nation. 1 Sam 17 reveals the beginning of David's brilliant military career -- his vanquishing of Goliath and Israel's rout of the Philistines. As a military leader under Saul, David frequently fought with the Philistines (1 Sam. 18:5, 30). In exile from Saul's court, David fought against Israel's enemies to the south (1 Sam. 27:8). It is not to be supposed that these neighbors of Israel's never occupied at least a portion of Israel and subjugated some of her people. Furthermore, even in David's own reign, the nation was under the tyranny, for a time, of an imposter, Absalom (2 Sam. 15-19), and Sheba (2 Sam. 20). Any one of these encounters could have triggered the contemplations of Psalm 14. Ryrie suggests (RSB) in his note on Ps. 14:7, "David longs for the establishing of the Messianic kingdom on earth (cf. Isa. 59:20-21; Rom. 11:26-27)." He is supported in this view by Allen P. Ross (TBKC). This seems a bit overdrawn, for no world-wide rule is hinted at in this psalm. Nevertheless, there is universal condemnation of all of mankind in 14:1-3. In this psalm, in any case, David yearns for the complete salvation of Israel from her Gentile enemies. Sadly, three millennia later, his prayer has not yet been answered. As Jesus Himself predicted, even now, Jerusalem is trampled underfoot by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled (Luke 21:24).
